5. PRESENTATION OF ANNUAL REPORT ON DIVERSITY IN CAMPUS AND SYSTEMWIDE EXECUTIVE SEARCHES

[Background material was provided to Regents in advance of the meeting, and a copy is on file in the Office of the Secretary and Chief of Staff.]

Vice President Lloyd recalled that, in response to a July 2020 recommendation of the Regents Working Group on Chancellor Search and Selection, Systemwide Human Resources was requested to provide an annual report to the Regents on diversity in recruitment for campus and systemwide executive leadership positions. The report presented with this item, the Senior Management Group (SMG) Recruitments Diversity Report, covered the period March 2020 to February 2022. The report had a more limited scope, focused on SMG recruitment as the University did not have a systemwide applicant tracking system to centrally collect consistent applicant data from all the UC locations. The University uses a decentralized hiring model in which each UC location hires for positions, manages its own recruitment processes, and selects its own applicant tracking system. These SMG report data required several months of manual collection from UC locations and from firms engaged by the University.

The report indicated how hires have affected the overall diversity of the SMG population and how well the SMG population reflected the diversity of UC students, faculty, and staff and of the State of California. Overall, the report confirmed that UC has made progress toward achieving diversity among its executive leader employees in support of the University’s diversity goals expressed in Regents Policy 4400: Policy on University of California Diversity Statement to better reflect the diversity of the UC and state population.

UC’s diversity recruitment strategies aim to increase the diversity of the applicant pool and candidate pool throughout each stage of the recruitment, which in turn increases the potential for a diverse candidate pool to provide opportunities to hire candidates who self-identify as one or more historically excluded populations currently underrepresented in the workforce. While the purpose of these strategies was to increase the diversity of the applicant and candidate pools, individual applicant and candidate diversity information was not a position-related qualification and could not be used in the recruitment evaluation and selection process.

UC uses many different diversity recruitment strategies to ensure inclusive and diverse pools. To attract a diverse applicant pool, UC uses inclusive and gender-neutral language in position descriptions, advertisements, and announcements and avoids limiting the position description to required or preferred qualifications that may exclude or deter prospective applicants with non-traditional education and/or career paths who might be successful candidates. Position descriptions include a qualification for demonstrated self-awareness and active commitment and engagement with others to enhance equity, diversity, and inclusion in decisions and actions.

To ensure that processes and decisions are equitable, inclusive, and minimize bias, many of the senior leader executive searches have included a Recruitment Equity Advisor on recruitment or selection advisory committees. Another strategy is to include interview questions that provide candidates with an opportunity to share their perspectives and what they have done to champion or support equity, diversity, and inclusion in the workplace, and what they envision doing if hired for the position.

Ms. Lloyd presented some key findings of the report. With an aggregated starting applicant pool of 2,549 completed searches, SMG recruitments overall retained diverse candidate pools throughout each stage of the recruitment process and resulted in 32 percent of hired candidates who self-identified as one or more historically excluded populations currently underrepresented in the workforce. This in turn increased the overall SMG population diversity from March 2020 to February 2022 for racially and ethnically diverse individuals and for woman-identified individuals by five percent for both groups. The population of hired SMG members was similar to or more diverse than UC faculty populations, but there were still opportunities to increase the overall diversity of the SMG population.

Fifty percent, or 20 of the 40 new SMG hires, were internal candidates, which demonstrated UC locations’ commitment and value in supporting senior-level employee career development and retention through internal mobility and promotion. The SMG offer acceptance rate was 85 percent, or 40 out of 47 offers. Ten percent, or 76 out of 761 qualified candidates withdrew from recruitments at different stages before the offer stage. The most frequently cited reasons for candidates withdrawing or declining offers were accepting another position, a salary issue, cost of living concerns, or family unable or unwilling to relocate.
Committee Chair Leib asked Ms. Lloyd how she felt about the statistics in the report. Ms. Lloyd responded that this was a small population and that these were some of the most important roles at UC toward and into which employees can advance. She found it heartening that the University was promoting individuals internally and striving to bring more diverse candidates into applicant pools.

Regent Park reflected that these data were not particularly easy to retrieve and that the overall direction indicated by the data was positive. It was good that the University was taking the time to check on SMG diversity. She referred to the proportion of Latino(a) candidates at the applicant stage and stated that the University must be able to take some action to increase representation of Latino(a) candidates at this stage. UC must think about how it can improve at each stage of the cycle. She asked if UC, when considering search firms to engage, asks these firms about their track record on diversity. Ms. Lloyd responded that this was an appropriate question to ask. The University had a panel of search firms from which it selects firms to conduct executive searches. UC asks questions about a firm’s track record on diversity and asks firms to maintain statistics.

Regent Park asked if this was a question that firms need to answer in order to be pre-approved for UC’s panel. Ms. Lloyd explained that this question was asked in the Request for Proposals process. After narrowing down the number of firms for consideration, UC could ask these questions again as well.

Regent Pérez stated that he was shocked by how bad the statistics were for Latino(a)s at every step in the process. The numbers were especially bad in relation to the composition of the California population and he criticized the idea that these outcomes could be characterized as an improvement. There would have to be a rethinking in order to effect a change in outcomes. With respect to executive search firms, he questioned the usefulness of diversity statements and self-reported track records. All firms had a glowing diversity statement, but a firm’s product or effort might not correspond to its statement. Based on his experiences of past searches, Regent Pérez noted that these efforts can seem performative and that sometimes individuals are placed in the applicant pool whose background is not aligned with the position; in these cases, one is doing a disservice to these individuals. This might produce favorable recruitment statistics but bad outcomes. He emphasized the need to secure the candidate who is the right fit for the job and will succeed. The effort for diversity must be real and not performative.
