UPDATES ON FEDERAL FINANCIAL AID AND PATH TO DEBT-FREE UC

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Significant changes to federal financial aid regulations have affected University of California students in 2024–25 in the following ways:

- The Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) was revised for the first time in 40 years. The delivery of the FAFSA was delayed significantly, affecting students, parents, and campus operations.
- The FAFSA changes had the greatest effect on students in “mixed status families,” i.e., those in which the student is a citizen or permanent resident, but one or more parent is undocumented.
 - In April, the State opened the California Dream Act Application (CADAA) to these students as a short-term fix for them to meet the State and UC financial aid deadline while continuing to recommend that they complete a FAFSA.
- Additional delays in the processing of records, including miscalculations by the U.S. Department of Education and limited functionality to submit updates, have created challenges for students and financial aid staff.
- The need analysis and Pell Grant formulas changed. Modeling suggests that this will result in $100 million more in federal Pell Grants for UC students but also about the same amount of increased financial need. Initial data on outcomes will be available in December 2024.

Federal and State changes mean that the goal of a debt-free pathway for all students by 2030 may be delayed. Three factors contribute to this outcome:

- Inflation has increased non-tuition educational costs for students.
- While the Middle Class Scholarship will increase for 2024–25, the budget agreement includes a decrease for 2025–26.
- Changes in federal need analysis mean that the estimated amount that families can pay will decrease, creating more need for financial aid.

BACKGROUND

Federal Financial Aid Changes

The Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) Simplification Act was signed into law in December 2020. As summarized by the U.S. Department of Education, it does four things:

1. Replaces the Expected Family Contribution with the Student Aid Index,
2. Modifies the assessment of family income and assets in several ways,
3. Expands eligibility for Pell Grants, and,
4. Streamlines the FAFSA form.

The streamlining of the FAFSA form primarily involves a closer tie with the U.S. Internal Revenue Service (IRS) data on income. In addition to the FAFSA Simplification Act, the Fostering Undergraduate Talent by Unlocking Resources for Education (FUTURE Act) created new identity validation requirements for access to IRS data.

FAFSA: Delayed Delivery, Including Data Errors

The 2024–25 FAFSA was released to students on January 1 of this year. While January 1 was the release date for decades, students were able to file the form starting in October for the past few cycles. More significantly, campus financial aid offices normally started receiving FAFSA data days after students submitted the forms; this year, campuses only started receiving FAFSA data in mid-March.

This delay prevented the release of financial aid offers until mid- to late April. For this reason, UC moved its deadline for freshman applicants to accept an offer of admission (Statement of Intent to Register or SIR) from May 1 to May 15, along with the California State University.

By May 15, campuses reported FAFSA filing at rates comparable to prior admission cycles and 90 to 95 percent of applicants had received financial aid. Every UC campus extended the SIR deadline for individual students who needed more time due to a late financial aid offer. Nevertheless, there are persistent problems for small numbers of students whose FAFSAs present no Student Aid Index and cannot be packaged.

	Oct.	Nov.	Dec.	Jan.	Feb.	Mar.	Apr.	May	Jun.
Prior to 2018-19	-	-	-	FAFSA Opens; Schools Get Data	Admission Offers Begin	March 2 Priority Deadline; Financial Aid Offers	-	May 1: SIR for Freshmen	June 1: SIR for Transfers
2018-19 to 2023-24	FAFSA Opens; Schools Get Data	-	-	-	Admission Offers Begin	March 2 Priority Deadline; Financial Aid Offers	-	May 1: SIR for Freshmen	June 1: SIR for Transfers
2024-25	-	-	-	FAFSA Opens	Admission Offers Begin	Schools Get Data, which include some errors	Financial Aid Offers	May 2 Priority Deadline; May 15: SIR for Freshmen	June 1: SIR for Transfers

It is also worth noting that the priority filing deadline for State financial aid, which is normally March 2, was moved first to April 2 and then to May 2. UC followed suit with its own financial aid filing deadline. The deadline for the Middle Class Scholarship was moved to July 1.

FAFSA Delivery Problems

In addition to the delayed deployment, the new FAFSA had several problems at rollout that made it more difficult for students and parents to submit the form. Many of the problems were resolved or work-around solutions identified, as tracked by the Department of Education.¹

The biggest challenge was for students whose parents or spouse do not have a Social Security Number. As a citizen or permanent resident, the student is entitled to receive federal financial aid. However, the identity verification processes required by the FUTURE Act precluded them from completing the FAFSA until mid-March. Starting on March 13, these students were instructed to email copies of documents to the Department of Education to validate their parents’ identities. The Department of Education subsequently provided a temporary fix to allow contributors without a Social Security Number to immediately access the application; however, technical challenges continue to prevent successful submission of a FAFSA for some of these students.

On April 9, the California Student Aid Commission, in collaboration with the public segments of higher education, opened the California Dream Act Application (CADAA)—normally only available to undocumented students—to mixed status families. This was a valuable stopgap measure to allow these students to meet the May 2 deadline for State and University financial aid. These students were encouraged to file a FAFSA in order to access the federal financial aid to which they are entitled.

Subsequently, the Department of Education introduced miscalculations in the Institutional Student Information Records (ISIRs) that schools use to develop financial aid packages for students. Furthermore, in July, they announced that updates to student FAFSAs would need to be submitted individually, rather than in batches, slowing financial aid processes. Fortunately, and with truly heroic effort, UC campuses were able to disburse funds on time at both semester and quarter campuses.

UC Federal Advocacy regarding FAFSA

In December, the Department of Education issued a notice for comment on the Federal Student Aid (FSA) ID and account creation process for individuals without a Social Security Number in connection with Person Authentication Service. The UC Office of Federal Governmental Relations (FGR), in partnership with Student Financial Support, drafted a comment letter expressing concerns about students from mixed status families who are unable to create a FSA ID to file a FAFSA form. FGR filed the comment on February 6, 2024, on behalf of Provost Newman.

On March 1, 2024, FGR submitted a letter on behalf of President Drake expressing concerns about issues related to the 2024–25 FAFSA form rollout. The letter highlighted three key issues: accessibility, flexible student aid calculations, and administrative relief. Of note, while the letter expressed appreciation for the Department of Education’s efforts to offer a temporary fix (in which FAFSA contributors without a Social Security Number receive an email confirmation), it called for the Department to prioritize the development of a permanent solution to ensure that all students from mixed status families can complete their FAFSA forms.

In April, Shawn Brick, Associate Vice Provost for Student Financial Support, and Han Mi Yoon-Wu, Associate Vice Provost, Systemwide Undergraduate Admissions, were in Washington, D.C. for meetings on Capitol Hill and with the Department of Education to continue positioning UC as a resource to the Department and offer assistance and ideas for potential solutions for some of the issues. On August 7, 2024, the Department announced a phased rollout for the 2025–26 FAFSA, to include a voluntary testing period for select community partners and higher education institutions. UC Merced applied and was selected as part of the initial cohort of beta testers.

Federal Pell Grant Eligibility and Student Aid Index

In addition to changes to the FAFSA form, the federal government changed the formulas behind financial aid eligibility in several ways. For example, the formula used to produce an Expected Family Contribution (EFC) ranged from zero to $999,999; now it will produce a Student Aid Index that ranges from -$1,500 to over $1 million. Furthermore, the treatment of the number of siblings in the family attending college has changed. UCOP partnered with UCLA’s Financial Aid and Scholarships data team and with campus financial aid professionals across the system to estimate the effect of these changes.

The good news for UC students in the modeling includes:

- A 13 percent increase in the number of UC students receiving a federal Pell Grant,
- A 22 percent increase (over $100 million) in the dollars of federal Pell Grant awarded to UC students, and,
- More students will qualify for the Path to Debt-Free program.

The challenging news for UC and its students in the modeling includes:

- An increase of $100 million in additional financial need, which minimizes the effect of additional Pell Grant funding, and,
- A loss of Pell Grant eligibility for some students who have siblings in college, which no longer is taken into account.

The first glimpse of actual outcomes for 2024–25 will be available in late fall 2024.

Update on Path to Debt-Free UC

President Drake has established a University of California systemwide goal to provide debt-free paths to a degree, wherein students' contributions to covering their educational costs can be met through service learning or student work-learning opportunities. Furthermore, Governor Newsom made providing debt-free pathways a goal for the University to achieve for all California undergraduate students by 2030. Finally, the State Legislature reformed and expanded the Middle Class Scholarship program with the intent of providing a debt-free education at both the California State University and UC.

The University will continue with its Path to Debt-Free UC, which started in fall 2022. More students will qualify this fall than last year as a result of the federal changes to financial aid described above.

Factors Working Towards Debt-Free	Factors Working Against Debt-Free
+ $100 million in additional Pell Grant (estimated)	- $100 million in additional financial need (estimated)
+ $100 million in additional Cal Grant and MCS*
+ $67 million in additional UC grant (return-to-aid on tuition increase and enrollment growth)	- $200 million in aggregate need due to inflation
SUM: + $267 million in additional aid	SUM: - $300 million in additional need

* The budget agreement in 2024–25 assumes a future decrease in MCS for 2025-26.
